Well, we admit that Dempsey is a great offensive fighter. But if he had not been lucky enough to land that heart punch and the left hook to the law the result might have been different. If Willard had ever got started result because Dempsey has no de-

It is true, Dempsey has no stereoyped defense. He fights differently

Dempsey, like McGovern, iris in upon his foe and nwings a all the power that he has in his lerb body.

Is Real Bone Crusher. They call Dempsey the "bone crusher" and so he is. I have seen terrible punches delivered in a prize ring, but nothing equal to the first two that Dempsey landed upon the giant Willard. The first was a punch tol the heart, the second a left-hander to the jaw. Those two wallops started Willard on his downfall. And mind was they were delivered at a man who never before had been knocked off his feet, never even dazed in a prize ring, and who was of such formidable proportions that it was figured humanly impossible to knock him out. And they hit Willard while he was fresh and absolutely unwwearied.

ments that Dempsey has no defense. Admitting the fact that he uses no orthodox methods, I cling to the belief that his style of going in at a man, the lucking and bending, and his amazing shifts back and forth conglitute a de-tense natural that is remarkable. Some persons criticize Dempsey's open style of fighting. It is my belief open style of highling. It is my belief that any effort to change Dempsey's methods would be ruinous for him. If he had to fight in any other way than he does he would not be fighting naturally. And when a man doesn't battle in a natural stauce he is at a distinct disadvantage.

All of them felt at the outset that it would be quite easy to drive through some smashers that the send through some send through some smashers that the send through them felt at the outset that it would be quite easy to drive through some smashers, that Dempsey would be easy to hit because he apparently keeps his gw unprotected. But all of them have learned the folly of this belief within a few minutes after they entered the ring.

Youthful Golf Stars Plan an Extended Trip

Word comes from Atlants that Bobby Jones and Perry Adair are contemplating an invasion of Europe next season to have a try at the French and British goif champlon-ships. Both youngsters are well supplied with nerve, and it's quite possible that they night clean up on the Continent. But when it comes to the English title tournament it's quite a different proposition.

And then, too, it might be well for them to wait and see how they come out in the United States amateur tournament at Pittsburgh briter tournament at Pittsburgh briter completing the final arrangements for their foreign invasion.

It's barely possible that neither will make as good a showing as they expect, and that some of the other men will convince these ventiful ators that the other men will convince these yentiful stars that it's not yet time for them to shine in full refulgence. Adair, by the way, was benten in the Southern golf championship recently by a chap named Jacoby, from New Orleans, who had never figured in a feeterless toward.

Yachtsmen Wondering About Lipton's "Secret'

LONDON, July 20. - Sir Thomas Lipton, in a newspaper interview, is quoted today as saying that he has neguired a "secret invention" that will increase substantially the Shamrock IV's chance of winning the America's cup, when the races are sailed in American waters next year.

Mr. Dudley has so many points of interest that visitors to the State Fair should the a string around, their fingers marked "Mr. Dudley, world's record for half-mile dash by two-year-old trotters, 1:023," and hunt him up when they reach the grounds to get a first-hand view of him, and get their own personal impressions of this world's recordholder. Some of the incidents in his life are as follows: He was bred by James B. Magowan, of Mt. Sterling, Ky., owner of sire. One day a foriorn-looking piece of humanity of the genus "hobo" strolled into the Magowan barn looking for some sort of charity, preferably some of Kentucky's justly famous ham, All he lacked in appearances and ready funds was more than made up for by the speedlest tongue that had ever favored Mr. Sterling with a call. So speedy was the tourist that he won a first-class meal from Mr. Magowan, incidentally telling the Kentuckian that his name was Sr. Dudley.

The noted breeder decided thereupon that there was speed in the name of "Mr. Dudley," hence the good-looking black colt was registered under the name of Mr. Dudley.

After taking a yearling mark of 2:254, he passed through a Madison Square Garden auction held by Fasis-Tipton Company and became the pronectly of the New York banker, Mr. Richard Delafield, at his bid of $2.600. He was turned over to the twenty-two-gar-old horseman, Lyman Brusie, and what this colt did at Cleveland. Onlo, goes to the credit of his youthful
